

Worship for April 2nd did not record, but Baudelina's sermon was so good that I decided that you all need to read it.

She started by taking Keith+ and Barb Axberg and sat them down with Rosa Paz, pretending that she had brought them to Rosa's house. She then explained that in Mexican culture, if you go to someone's house and they offer you food or drink, it is rude not to accept it. The host is obliged to offer you some food.

She then told a story that her mom would always offer the tamales and pozole she had made for special occasions to guests, and her siblings would be sad because their special food wouldn't be available to eat. She recalled her siblings asking her mom to make some late and night for them... and guests still showed up to eat.

She likened this act of service on her mom's part to Christ's call for us to be servants.
